

SpokenWeb Postdoctoral Fellow in the Multimedia Archive
Simon Fraser University
Department of English

We invite applicants for a one-year postdoctoral fellow to explore SFU's extensive holdings on the theme of the multimedia archive. The aim of this fellowship is to promote critical and creative responses to SFU SpokenWeb's rich literary audio archive—one of the largest collections in Canada—and to investigate the connections between this audio archive and the Library's holdings in rare and fine books, manuscripts, and other media, as well as connections between other literary audio collections. The fellow will be based the Department of English and will work under the co-supervision of Professors Michelle Levy and Stephen Collis. The fellow will join the SSHRC-funded SpokenWeb partnership, a project that has spent the last five years coordinating the discovery, digitization, description, and study of literary audio. Our partnership holds a diverse collection of literary sound recordings from across Canada and beyond and has engaged in a range of scholarly and creative outputs. Applicants are encouraged to learn more about the project by consulting <https://spokenweb.ca> and about SFU's archival audio collections at <https://www.lib.sfu.ca/about/branches-depts/special-collections/exhibits-projects/spokenweb>.

This postdoctoral fellowship aims to engage an emerging scholar whose research and/or creative practices are at the intersection of multiple fields, including Sound Studies, Literary Studies, Book History, Digital Humanities, Digital Media, Gender Studies, and Archival Studies. The position comprises 60% collaborative research, supervision, and research administration work toward the SpokenWeb project at SFU. These responsibilities will include activities such as:

- Supervising research assistants to document and conduct research with SFU SpokenWeb's literary audio collections.
- Designing materials for SpokenWeb to support academic and public engagement with relevant collections.
- Developing workshops and training modules for creative and critical remediation of literary audio.
- Creating exhibits and organizing events to showcase the relevant collections of SFU SpokenWeb.
- Actively participating in the SpokenWeb partnership, including attendance at and participation in the annual symposium and sound institute.
- Developing podcasts for SpokenWeb, and other research outputs including articles, exhibits and research creation.

40% of the position comprises the fellow's individual literary audio research project outlined in their letter of intent.

In their letter of intent, applicants are encouraged to address how their proposed research can intersect with and support the SpokenWeb project (such as the recent special issue of English Studies in Canada on "New Sonic Approaches in Literary Studies," and the SpokenWeb podcast), as well how their work will engage with specific SFU collections.
